E

E, e [E's, Es pl.] 1 The fifth letter of the English alphabet: from Phenician he, through Hebrew he, Greek epsilon, and Roman E. 2 Any sound of the letter e. In English it is variously pronounced. In accented open syllables, or when followed by a consonant and silent e, it is characteristically long, as in be, even, idea, me, medium, mete, breve, Maltese. In unaccented open syllables, many speakers give it the long sound also, as in event, create, define, repose, etc.; others give it the sound of short i. In accented closed syllables it is characteristically short, as in bet, bless, edge, tenant, welcome; many speakers give it the same sound, less markedly, in unaccented syllables, as in concentrate, enlarge, estate, recent, horses, bosses, kindest, pointed, wicked, but most speakers sound it as short i or schwa.

E before r in an accented syllable is variously pronounced: when followed by a consonant it has the sound of u in burn, as in fern, ergot, hermit, merge, perfect; when followed by e in the same syllable, as in here, mere, severe, sphere, it is often said to be long, but its sound is close to that of short i, as in the first syllable of irritate; when followed by a vowel or a second r in a succeeding syllable, as in very, heretic, peril, derogate, berry, the sound is short e. In an unaccented syllable e before r is normally obscure, as in baker, perform, cavern.

The digraph ee is pronounced like long e, as in creed, feet, meet, and before r like the e in here, as in deer, beer, cheer. The digraph ea is most frequently pronounced like long e, as in bean, read, meat, stream, and before r like the e in here, as in dear, fear, hear; less frequently like short e, as in feather, steady, realm, and before r and a following consonant like the u in urn, as in earth, search, learn, etc. The digraph ei is usually pronounced like long e, as in conceive, receipt, seize, but is sometimes sounded as long a, as in freight, reign, eight, and before r like the a in care, as in their, heir. The digraph ie, in accented open syllables, is normally pronounced like long i, as in die, fie, lie, tie; in accented closed syllables, the normal pronunciation is like long e, as in thief, field, shriek, piece, priest, and before r like e in here, as in pier, cashier; in unaccented open syllables it becomes short i, as in doggie, coolie, Dixie.

Final e is nearly always silent, as in able, crane, create, edge, estate, merge, one, welcome. E is lost in the pronunciation of the verbal and participial ending -ed, as in bared, blazed, caned, darned, steamed, weaned, etc., and in the -es ending of both nouns and verbs, as in bones, Negroes, potatoes, does, goes, etc. See ALPHABET, TYPOGRAPHY.

—tr. verb 1 To bring about; bring to an issue or to full success; cause; produce. 2 To achieve; accomplish. [<L. effectus <ex, out, + facio, do] —EF FECT ER noun —EF·FECT I BLE adj.

Synonyms (verb): accomplish, achieve, close, complete, conclude, consummate, do, end, execute, finish, fulfil, perform, produce, realize. Effect, execute, consummate, and realize all signify to embody in fact what was before in thought. One may realize that which he has done nothing to bring about; he may realize the dreams of youth by inheriting a fortune; but he cannot effect his early designs except by doing the utmost that is necessary to make them fact. Effect includes all that is done to accomplish the intent; execute refers rather to the formal steps; consummate is limited quite sharply to the concluding act. Care must be taken to distinguish between effect and affect. An officer executes the law when he proceeds against its violators; a purchase is consummated when the money is paid and the property delivered. Execute refers more commonly to the commands of another, effect and consummate to one's own designs; as, the commander effected the capture of the fort, because his officers and men promptly executed his commands. See ACCOMPLISH, DO, MAKE.

EF·FI CIENT (–fish′·unt) adj. 1 Acting or having power to act effectually; competent, as, an efficient leader. 2 Productive of effects; causative. —noun 1 A qualified person; specifically, in the British army, a volunteer certified for his qualifications. 2 An efficient cause. 3 A factor in mathematical operations. [<L. efficiens; see EFFECT] —·LY adv.

Synonyms (adj.): effective, effectual, efficacious. That is effective which accomplishes an intended effect with emphasis, decision, and certainty; that is effectual which acts with such finality as to leave no more to be done. A person may be said to be efficient in general character or action; as, an efficient businessman; he may be called effective in some special relation; as, an effective speaker; the efficient person is habitually energetic, industrious, sagacious, and alert; a man may be an effective speaker on occasion who is not efficient in ordinary life. Efficacious and effectual are not used of persons. Antonyms: awkward, dull, feckless, feeble, fruitless, idle, ineffective, ineffectual, inefficacious, inefficient, inoperative, negligent, powerless, remiss, unavailing, useless, vain.

EFFICIENT CAUSE The immediate force or agent in the performance of work.

EF·FRONT·ER·Y (ĕ·frŭnt′–) noun [·ER·IES pl.] Insolent assurance; audacity; impudence. [<L. ex, out, + frons, forehead]

Synonyms: assurance, audacity, boldness, brass, hardihood, impudence, insolence, shamelessness. Audacity, in the sense here considered, is a reckless defiance of law, decency, public opinion, or personal rights, claims, or views, approaching the meaning of impudence or shamelessness, but always carrying the thought of the personal risk that one disregards in such defiance; the merely impudent or shameless person may take no thought of consequences; the audacious person recognizes and recklessly braves them. Hardihood defies and disregards the rational judgment of men. Effrontery (L. effrons, bare-faced, shameless) adds to audacity and hardihood the special element of defiance of considerations of propriety, duty, and respect for others, yet not to the extent implied in impudence or shamelessness. Impudence disregards what is due to superiors: shamelessness defies decency. Boldness is forward-stepping courage, spoken of with reference to the presence and observation of others; boldness, in the good sense, is courage viewed from the outside; but the word is frequently used in an unfavorable sense to indicate a lack of proper sensitiveness and modesty. Compare ASSURANCE, BRAVE, IMPUDENCE. Antonyms: bashfulness, coyness, diffidence, modesty, sensitiveness, shrinking, shyness, timidity.

EF·FULGE verb [EF FULGED, EF FULG·ING] To beam or shine forth in great luster; radiate. [<L., effulgeo, shine forth]

EIS·TEDD·FOD (is·teth'·vŏd) noun [EIS·TEDD·FO' DAU (-vŏ'·dī) pl.] An annual assembly of bards, in Wales, to foster national, musical, and literary interests. Also EIS·TEDD·VOD. [<Welsh, session, <eistedd, to sit] —EIS·TEDD·FOD'·IC adj.

EI·THER (ee'·thur or, especially Br., ī'·thur) adj. 1 One or the other of two, indeterminately or indifferently. 2 Each of two; one and the other; as, on either side. See synonyms under EVERY.

—pron. One of two; one or the other.

—conj. In one of two or more cases, indeterminately or indifferently: used as a disjunctive correlative introducing a first alternative, the second and any other being preceded by or; as, either I shall go or he will come.

—adv. At all; any more so: used after the denial of an alternative; as, he could not speak, and I could not either. [<OE. æghwæther]

E JAC'·U LATE verb [·LAT·ED, ·LAT·ING] 1 To utter or exclaim suddenly; speak vehemently and briefly. 2 To throw out suddenly; eject, as fluids from the body. See synonyms under CALL, EXCLAIM. [<L. e, out, + jaculor, throw] —E·JAC'·U·LA·TIVE adj. —E·JAC'·U·LA·TOR noun.

E·JAC U·LA'·TION noun The uttering of brief sudden exclamations; an exclamation.

E·JAC'·U·LA·TO RY adj. 1 In the form or of the nature of an ejaculation; exclamatory. 2 Pertaining to or using ejaculation, in any sense.

E·JECT tr. verb To throw or drive out by sudden force; expel; dispossess. See synonyms under BANISH.

—noun A perception, mental state, etc. (of another) inferred as an entity by one's own consciousness, but which is essentially inaccessible to consciousness; as, my dog's mind is an eject of my mind. [<L. ejectus <e, out, + jacio, throw]

E·JEC·TA noun pl. [L.] Matter or refuse that has been cast out, as by a volcano or the body. Also E·JEC·TA·MEN'·TA.

E·JEC TION noun 1 The act of ejecting; expulsion. 2 Matter ejected. —E JEC TIVE adj. —E·JEC·TIVE·LY adv.

E·JECT MENT noun 1 A casting out; eviction. 2 Specifically, in law, an action to recover possession of real estate, with damages for wrongful withholding; also, the writ by which this action is instituted.

E·JEC·TOR noun One who or that which ejects; especially, a device for freeing a mechanism from used or completed material so as to be in readiness for a repeating operation.

E·JI·DO (eh·hee'·thō) noun A communal farm, specifically in Mexico. [<Sp.]

EJ·MI·A·DZIN' (ĕzh·mī·ă·dzeen') Same as ECHMIADZIN.

EKA- A combining form from Sanskrit ēka, one, signifying next in order, and applied to hypothetical chemical elements in Mendeleyev's periodic system required to complete his series as grouped according to properties; as, eka-silicon, later identified as the element germanium.

E·KA·TE·RI′·NA (ā·kah·tā·rē′·nah) [Rus.] Same as CATHERINE.

E·KA·TE·RIN·BURG′ See SVERDLOVSK.

E·KA·TE·RI·NO·DAR′ See KRASNODAR.

E·KA TE RI·NO·SLAV′ See DNEPROPETROVSK.

EKE tr. verb [EKED, EK·ING] 1 To supplement; make small additions to; piece out: usually with out. 2 To obtain or produce (a living) with difficulty. 3 [Obs.] To protract; lengthen; increase. —noun [Obs.] An addition, as to a bell rope; postscript; appendix. —adv. & conj. [Obs.] Likewise; also. [<OE. ēcan, increase]

EK·KA noun A one-horse vehicle used in India.

EL noun [Pop.] An elevated railroad. Also L.

E·LAB′·O·RATE tr. verb (-rāte) [·RAT·ED, ·RAT·ING] 1 To develop and complete by thorough and careful work; embellish with details. 2 To produce by labor.
—adj. (-rit) Developed in detail with care or painstaking; carefully wrought out; done with thoroughness or exactness. [<L. elaboratus <e, out, + laboro, labor] —E·LAB·O·RATE·LY adv. —E·LAB·O·RATE·NESS noun —E·LAB·O·RA′·TION noun —E·LAB·O·RA·TIVE adj.

ELÆO-, ELAIO- Combining forms from Greek elaion, olive oil, <elaia, olive tree.

E·LÆ′·O·LITE (e·lee′·o·līte) noun A coarsely crystallized or massive opaque variety of nephelite with a resinous luster: also spelled eleolite.

EL·A·GAB′·A·LUS Same as HELIOGABALUS.

E·LA·IN Same as OLEIN.

E·LAINE A feminine personal name. Compare HELEN.
—ELAINE In Arthurian legend, any of several ladies; specifically, the daughter of King Pelles, mother of Galahad; and the Fair Maid of Astolat who died for love of Lancelot, familiar to readers of Tennyson's Idylls of the King.

EL′ AI·O·PLAST (ēl′·ē·o-) noun One of the highly refractive oil-secreting protoplasmic granules found near the nuclei of plant cells: also spelled eleoplast. [<Gr. elaion, olive oil, + plastos, formed]

E·LAM An ancient country between the Persian Gulf and the Caspian Sea. Gen. x, 22. —E′·LAM·ITE noun —E LAM·IT′·IC, E′ LAM·IT ISH adj.

ELAND

É·LAN (eh·lahN′) noun [F.] Ardor; dash; vivacity.

E·LAND (ee′·lund) noun A large oxlike African antelope with twisted horns (genus Taurotragus); especially the common eland (T. oryx), of NE. Africa. [<D., elk]

É·LAN VI·TAL (vē·tahl′) [F.] Literally, life force; vital energy; in Bergson's philosophy, the creative life impulse of all evolution. Compare VITALISM.

EL·A·PHINE (-fine or -fin) adj. Of or pertaining to a genus (Elaphodus) of deer native in China; also, describing the antlers characteristic of this genus. [<Gr. elaphos, stag]

E·LAPSE intr. verb [E LAPSED (-lapst′), E LAPS·ING] To glide or slip by; pass away: said of time. [<L. elapsus <e, from, + labor, glide]

EL A·RAISH (ah·rīsh′) [Ar.] Same as LARACHE.

ELAS The largest and most effective Greek guerilla organization in World War II: military arm of EAM: from Ethnikos Laikos Apeleftherotikos Stratos, literally, National Popular Liberation Army.

E·LAS′·MO·BRANCH (-brangk) noun One of a class or subclass (Elasmobranchii or Chondrichthyes) of fishlike vertebrates having lamelliform gills attached by their distal ends, cartilaginous skeletons, and complicated brain with optic nerves forming a chiasma: including sharks and rays. Compare illustration under FISH. [<Gr. elasmos, metal plate, + L. branchia, gills]

E·LAS·TIC adj. 1 Spontaneously returning to a former size, shape, or configuration after being altered from it; springy; accommodating. 2 Capable of quick recovery, as from misfortune or depression; buoyant. 3 Increasing or diminishing readily in response to a changing stimulus, demand, or other causative influence; as, an elastic price, one that soars or drops quickly owing to sudden variations in demand. 4 Capable of expansion and contraction; flexible.
—noun A strip, cord, or piece of India rubber or of webbing made elastic by India rubber threads woven therein, used as a band, suspender, etc.; specifically, a garter. [<Gr. elastikos <elaunō, drive] —E LAS TI·CAL·LY adv.

E·LAS·TIC′·I·TY noun 1 That property of matter by virtue of which a body tends to resist deformation, returning to a former or normal size, shape, or configuration, after being deflected, compressed, expanded, twisted, or drawn; the rebounding quality of bodies; resilience; springiness; as, the elasticity of the air, the bow has lost its elasticity. 2 The tendency to recover from depression or misfortune; buoyancy.

E·LAS·TIN noun The protein substance, of high glycine and leucine content, which is found in tendons, cartilage, connective tissue, and bone.

E LAS TO·MER noun One of a class of polymerized compounds characterized by elastic, rubberlike properties, as the synthetic rubbers and various plastics.

EL·A·TER noun 1 A click beetle or elaterid. For illustration see under INSECT (injurious). 2 A spring or terminal bristlelike abdominal appendage of a springtail or podurid insect. 3 In the horsetail family of plants, (Equisetaceæ), one of the four club-shaped membranous bands attached at a single point on a spore formed by the splitting of the outer coat. 4 A sterile, elastic, spirally twisted filament for the dispersion of spores, as in liverworts, puffballs and slime molds. [<Gr. elatēr, driver, <elaunō, drive]

E LAT·ER ID adj. Of or pertaining to a family (Elateridæ) of beetles with serrate antennæ, including the click beetles or snapping beetles. —noun An elaterid beetle.

E·LAT ER IN noun A bitter cathartic crystalline compound, $C_{20}H_{28}O_5$, contained in elaterium.

E LAT′ ER·ITE noun An elastic, resinous, dark-brown subtranslucent mineral hydrocarbon, found in soft masses.

EL·A·TE′ RI UM noun 1 The squirting cucumber (Echallium elaterium); a purgative derived from its juice. 2 A greenish-to-gray mass contained in the juice of the fruit of the squirting cucumber.

EL·BA An island off the NW. coast of Italy; 86 square miles; place of Napoleon's first exile, 1814–15.

ELBE (ēlb; G. ēl′·buh) A river in Czechoslovakia and central Germany; 725 miles to the North Sea near Hamburg

EL BER·FELD (-fēlt) See WUPPERTAL.

EL·BERT A masculine personal name. Also [L.] EL BER TUS.

ELBERT, MOUNT A peak in central Colorado; 14,431 feet.

EL·BING A fortified seaport in East Prussia, Germany

EL BOW (-bō) noun 1 The joint at the bend of the arm; also, the joint resembling an elbow in the shoulder or hock of a quadruped. Compare illustration under HORSE. 2 Any outward bend resembling an elbow, as a short angular pipe fitting, or a projection on the side of a chair or sofa on which to rest the arm.
—verb To push with the elbows; also, to jostle; hustle. [<OE. elboga]

ELBOW ROOM Room for the movement of the elbows; figuratively, scope for activity or occupation.

EL BRUS (ēl′- or āl′·brōōs) A peak in the Caucasus Mountains in southern Russia; 18,526 feet; the highest peak in Europe. Also EL BRUZ.

EL BUCK noun [Scot.] Elbow.

EL·BURZ (-bōōrz′) A mountain range south of the Caspian Sea, in Iran; highest peak, Demavend, 18,60- feet.

EL CA NEY (cah·nāy′) A town in SE. Cuba; battle, 1898.

EL CAP·I TAN′ A precipitous mountain in the Yosemite Valley, California; 7,619 feet.

ELD noun [Obs.] Old times; antiquity; old age. [<OE. eldo, old age]

ELDER noun 1 A shrub (genus Sambucus) with white flowers and purple-black or red berries; the roots of some species contain a very poisonous alkaloid, but the flowers and berries are often used in medicine. 2 Any one of various trees or plants resembling elder; as, the poison elder (Toxicodendron vernix). [<OE. ellern]

ELDER adj. 1 Having lived longer; earlier born. 2 Senior: the comparative of old, preferred to older when only two are compared; as, an elder brother. Older and oldest may be said either of persons or of things; while elder and eldest apply to persons only, strictly to members of the same family. 3 Earlier in time. 4 Prior in rank.
—noun 1 A prince or head of a tribe or family. 2 A church officer or minister. 3 An older or aged person. 4 An ancestor. [<OE. eldra] —·SHIP noun.

EL′ DER·BER RY noun The drupe of the common elder.

ELD·ER·LY adj. Somewhat old; approaching old age.

ELD EST First-born; oldest: superlative of OLD. See ELDER.

ELDEST HAND The first player in a card game; the player on the dealer's left; in poker, the age: opposed to younger hand.

EL DING noun [Scot.] Firewood; fuel. [<ON.]

EL DO·RA·DO (-rah′·do) 1 A legendary South American region rich in gold; also, any region of the western United States conceived of as promising wealth and opportunity to the adventurous: a popular name for California during and after the gold rush of 1848–49. 2 Hence, any region rich in gold or opportunity, such as that sought for in the New World by the Spanish conquerors; also, a golden opportunity. Also EL·DO·RA′·DO.

EL DRED A masculine personal name.

EL DRITCH adj. [Scot.] Ghastly; weird. Also EL·DRICH.

EL EA·NOR (ēl′·i·nur or ēl′ i·nawr or ēl·i·uh·nawr) A feminine personal name. Also [L.] EL·E·A·NO′·RA, [Dan., G.] E·LE O·NO′·RE (ā·lā·o·nō′·rē), [It.] E·LE·O·NO′·RA (eh·lā·o·nō′·ruh). [<Gr., light]

—Eleanor of Aquitaine, 1122–1204, divorced wife of Louis VII of France; married Henry II of England: also called Eleanor of Guienne.
—Eleanor of Castile, died 1290, wife of Edward I of England.

El·e·at′·ic adj. Pertaining to or characteristic of Elea in Magna Græcia or Lower Italy, or the Eleatic school of philosophy. —noun 1 A native of Elea. 2 A disciple of the Eleatic school of philosophy. —El·e·at′·i·cism noun.

El·e·a′·zar (el·i·ā′·zur, Dutch ā·lā·ah′·zahr) A masculine personal name. Also El·e·a′·zer, [F.] É·lé·a·zar (ch·leh·ah·zahr′), E·le·a′·za·ro (It. ch·leh·ahd′·zah·ro; Sp. ch·leh·ah thah′·ro). [<Heb., God's help; or God is helper] el·e·cam·pane′ noun 1 A tall perennial herb of the composite family (Inuld helenium), having large leaves, yellow flowers, and a mucilaginous root yielding a tonic. 2 A coarse candy flavored with an extract made from the root of this herb. [<OF. enule-campane <LL. enula, elecampane, + campana, of the field]

e·lect tr. verb 1 To choose for an office by vote. 2 To make a choice or selection. 3 To select as a course of study in school or college; as, to elect history as a major.
—adj. 1 Elected to office, but not yet in charge: used as the second element in compounds, as president-elect. 2 Chosen of God for salvation, of saintly or divine character. 3 Selected; chosen; picked out.
—noun 1 A person, or body of persons, chosen of God for salvation or for special service. 2 One who is favored or preferred. [<L. electus <e, out, + lego, choose] e·lec·tion noun 1 The selecting of a person or persons for office, as by ballot. 2 A popular vote on any question. 3 A choice, as between alternatives; choice in general. 4 In Calvinism, the predestination of some individuals to be saved from God's wrath and punishment. See synonyms under ALTERNATIVE.

e·lec·tion·eer′ intr. verb To endeavor to win an election; canvass for votes.

e·lec·tive (-tiv) adj. 1 Of or pertaining to a choice by vote; also, obtained or bestowed by election. 2 Exerting the privilege of choice. 3 Subject to choice; optional. 4 Having a tendency to attract and combine with some substances and not with others, as, elective absorption.
—noun An optional study in a fixed college curriculum; as, logic is an elective next term. —e·lec·tive·ly adv. —e·lec·tive·ness noun.

e·lec·tor noun 1 One who elects; a person qualified to vote at an election; specifically, in the United States, a presidential elector. 2 One of the great princes who formerly (12th to 18th century) had the right of electing the Emperor of Germany. —presidential electors The persons chosen by the several States to elect the President and the Vice President of the United States. The number from each State equals the total of senators and representatives from the State.

e·lec·to·ral adj. Pertaining to, of, or comprising electors.

electoral college The whole corporate body of the presidential electors chosen at one election, although they never meet as a body; also, those of a single State, which do meet: a popular, unofficial term, first used informally in 1821.

e·lec·to·rate (-rit) noun 1 Those who elect; the mass of voters. 2 The rank or territory of an elector in the old German empire.

e·lec·tor·ess noun 1 A woman qualified to vote at an election. 2 The wife or widow of an elector of the old German empire. Also e·lec·tress.

E·lec·tra 1 A daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra, and sister of Orestes: the subject of several tragedies. 2 One of the Pleiades; mother of Dardanus. Also Elektra.

Electra-complex noun An exaggerated attachment of the daughter to her father: the female analog of the Œdipus-complex.

e·lec·tric adj. 1 Relating to, derived from, produced, or operated by electricity. 2 Containing, producing, or carrying electricity. 3 Spirited; magnetic; thrilling. Also e·lec·tri·cal. —noun 1 A street car, tram, or other vehicle run by electricity. 2 Any substance or material, as amber or resin, which can be given an electric charge by rubbing. [<LL. electricus <L. electrum <Gr. ēlektron, amber] —e·lec·tri·cal·ly adv.

ELECTRIC CELL
C Carbon (positive pole).
Z Zinc (negative pole).

electric breeze 1 A stream of ions repelled from an electrified point. 2 A brush discharge as used in therapeutics.

electric calamine Hemimorphite.

electric cell Any of a large variety of devices consisting of two dissimilar metals or materials immersed in an electrolyte, capable of generating an electric charge by chemical action.

electric chair 1 A chair used for electrocuting criminals by sending a high voltage of electricity through the body of the person fastened into it. 2 Hence, the death penalty.

electric clock Any of variously designed clocks, both of the pendulum and balance-wheel type, which are actuated by electricity in any way; especially, a clock operated by plugging in on an alternating electric current transmitting electromagnetic impulses from a master clock.

electric current A stream of electrons flowing through a conducting body; it is usually measured and expressed in terms of amperes, coulombs, and volts. See ELECTRON, PROTON.

electric displacement The theoretical movement of the electricity in a dielectric as a result of changes in the electric field where the latter is located.

electric eel A cyprinoid, eel-like fish (Electrophorus electricus) of tropical America, which sometimes reaches a length of six feet, carrying in its tail organs capable of delivering powerful electric shocks.

electric energy The capacity possessed by electricity for doing work.

electric fish Any fish having organs capable of imparting an electric shock.

electric furnace A furnace in which high temperatures are obtained by the use of an electric arc or by induction from a central power station; a smelting furnace in which the heat is produced by an electric current.

e·lec·tri·cian (-trish′·un) noun 1 One versed in the science of electricity. 2 An inventor, maker, or repairer of electrical apparatus.

e·lec·tric·i·ty noun 1 A fundamental characteristic of all matter, associated with the electron and proton of the atom, whose movements, free or controlled, lead to the development of fields of force and the generation of kinetic or potential energy. The electron is the basic unit of negative electricity, and the proton of positive electricity. Any accumulation of one kind of electricity in excess of an equivalent of the opposite kind is called a charge and is measured in appropriate units. A charge fixed at one point or within a circumscribed field of force, as a Leyden jar, is static electricity; a charge which flows through a conductor is current electricity. 2 The property of many substances, as amber, fur, glass, etc., mutually to attract or repel each other when subjected to friction. 3 The science which deals with the phenomena, laws, theory, and application of electricity.

electric light 1 Illumination produced by electricity. 2 The lamp, tower, or other device used for electric illumination, especially the bulb.

electric machine 1 An apparatus for generating static electricity, as by friction. 2 A dynamo.

electric motor A machine for transforming electric energy into mechanical power: opposed to dynamo.

electric ray An elasmobranch fish having a pair of electric organs; the torpedo.

e·lec′·tri·cute Same as ELECTROCUTE.

e·lec′·tri·fy verb [·fied, ·fy·ing] 1 To act upon, charge, or become charged with electricity. 2 To apply electricity to as a motive power; as, to electrify a railroad. 3 To arouse; startle; thrill. —e·lec′·tri·fi·a·ble adj. —e·lec·tri·fi·ca′·tion noun —e·lec′·tri·fi·er noun.

e·lec·trine (-trin) adj. 1 Made of electrum. 2 Made of or related to amber. —noun An imaginary substance, supposed by some to be the basis of electricity. [<Gr. ēlektrinos <ēlektron, amber] e·lec·trize (-trīze) tr. verb [·trized, ·triz·ing (trīz·ing)] To electrify. [<L. electrum; see ELECTRUM] —e·lec·tri·za′·tion noun.

e·lec·triz·er (-trīz·ur) noun One who or that which electrizes; usually, an apparatus for therapeutic electrifying.

e·lec·tro [Pop.] noun [·tros (trōze) pl.] 1 An electrotype. 2 Electroplating. —tr. verb To make an electrotype of; electroplate. [Abbreviation of ELECTROTYPE] electro- A combining form from Greek ēlektron, amber, representing electric in composition.

electro-analysis noun Analysis by and in accordance with the methods of electrolysis.

e·lec·tro·cap·il·lar′·i·ty noun That change in the surface tension between two conducting liquids in contact which occurs when an electric current is passed between them.

e·lec·tro·car′·di·o·gram noun A graph indicating electromotive variations in the action of the heart.

e·lec·tro·car′·di·o·graph noun An instrument for recording the electric current produced by the action of the heart muscle: used in the diagnosis of diseases affecting the heart. —e·lec·tro·car·di·og′·ra·phy noun.

e·lec·tro·chem′·is·try noun The branch of chemistry that treats of electricity as active in effecting chemical change. —e·lec·tro·chem′·i·cal adj. —e·lec·tro·chem′·i·cal·ly adv. —e·lec·tro·chem′·ist noun.

e·lec·tro-coagulation noun The destructive coagulation of protoplasmic material or of living tissue, healthy or morbid, by the passage through it of an electric current.

e·lec·tro·cul′·ture noun The stimulation of the growth, development, and maturing of plants by electrical means, especially by static electricity and fields of force in the atmosphere.

E·LEC′·TRO·CUTE tr. verb [CUT·ED, ·CUT·ING] To put to death by electricity; specifically, to execute in the electric chair: also spelled electricute. [<ELECTR(IC) + (EXE)CUTE] —E·LEC·TRO CU′·TION noun.

E LEC TRODE noun Either of the two poles of an electric battery or dynamo; an anode or a cathode: also called catelectrode. Compare illustration under ELECTRIC CELL.

E LEC TRO DE POS′ IT intr. verb To deposit chemically, as metal from a solution, by means of an electric current. —noun That which is so deposited. —E LEC TRO·DE PO·SI′·TION noun.

E·LEC·TRO DES IC CA′·TION noun The destruction of animal tissues by means of controlled high-frequency electric-spark discharges: also called fulguration.

E·LEC TRO·DI·AG NO′ SIS noun Diagnosis of the structural and functional condition of organs or tissues of the body by studying their response to electrical stimuli.

E LEC TRO·DY·NAM′·IC adj. Relating to the forces of attraction and repulsion produced by electric currents. —E LEC·TRO·DY NAM′·I·CAL adj.

E·LEC·TRO·DY NAM′ ICS noun The branch of physics which deals with the forces of electrical attraction and repulsion and with the energy-transformations of magnetic fields and electric currents.

E·LEC TRO DY·NA·MOM′·E·TER noun An instrument for measuring the strength of an electric current, as by the interaction of two wire coils.

E·LEC·TRO-EN CEPH′ A·LO·GRAM noun A record of electrical impulses and changes in the brain: important in the diagnosis of certain diseases, as epilepsy. —E LEC TRO-EN·CEPH′ A LO·GRAPH noun.

E·LEC·TRO-EN CEPH A LOG′·RA PHY noun The art and technique of recording electrical changes in the brain; also, the science of interpreting these changes in the diagnosis of epilepsy and other incapacitating brain diseases.

ELECTRO-ENDOSMOSIS noun The diffusion of fluids through permeable membranes or diaphragms by the application of an electrical potential.

E·LEC′ TRO GRAPH noun 1 The linear record of an electrometer. 2 An apparatus for tracing a design to be electro-etched for use in printing wall paper, calico, etc. 3 A telautograph. 4 An X-ray skiagraph. 5 A biograph employing the arc light. —E LEC·TRO GRAPH′·IC adj. —E·LEC·TROG RA PHY noun.

E·LEC TRO KI NET′ IC adj. Pertaining to or caused by electricity in motion.

E·LEC TRO KI NET′ ICS noun That branch of electrical science which treats of the motion of electricity and the forces producing or regulating it opposed to electrostatics.

E·LEC·TRO LIER′ (-leer′) noun A fixture, usually ornamental, for holding electric lamps.

E·LEC TROL Y·SIS noun 1 The decomposing of a chemical compound by passing an electric current through it. 2 Decomposition so effected.

E·LEC′ TRO LYTE noun 1 A substance, usually in solution, which will transmit an electric current by the formation of ions. 2 A solution which conducts an electric current between the electrodes of a cell, accompanied by the release of a gas or the deposition of a solid. —E LEC TRO LYT′ IC or ·I CAL adj. —E LEC TRO LYT′·I·CAL LY adv.

E·LEC′ TRO LYZE tr. verb [LYZED, ·LYZ·ING] To decompose by electric current. —E LEC TRO LY ZA′·TION noun —E LEC′·TRO·LYZ ER noun.

E·LEC TRO MAG′ NET noun A core of soft iron or the like, which temporarily becomes a magnet during the passage of an electric current through a coil of wire surrounding it. —E LEC·TRO·MAG·NET′ IC or ·I·CAL adj. —E LEC·TRO·MAG·NET′ I·CAL·LY adv.

E·LEC TRO·MAG′ NET·ISM noun 1 Magnetism developed by electricity. 2 That science which treats of the relations between electricity and magnetism and the phenomena due to these relations. Also E LEC TRO MAG·NET′ ICS.

E·LEC TRO MED·I·CA′ TION noun Introduction of drugs into the system by electrical means.

ELECTRO-METALLURGY noun The art or science of electrolytically depositing metals, or of separating them from their ores or alloys by electrolysis or the electric furnace. —ELECTRO-METALLURGICAL adj.

E·LEC·TROM·E TER noun An instrument for measuring an electric current.

E·LEC TROM E TRY noun The science or art of making electrical measurements. —E LEC TRO·MET′ RIC or ·RI CAL adj.

E LEC·TRO MO′ TION noun 1 The passage of an electric current in a voltaic circuit. 2 Motion produced by electricity employed as power.

E·LEC TRO MO′ TIVE adj. Producing, or tending to produce electricity; producing or produced by electromotion: distinguished from magnetomotive.

ELECTROMOTIVE FORCE That which determines the flow of electricity from one point to another; difference of potential: abbreviated E M F, or e.m.f. (with or without periods).

ELECTROMOTIVE SERIES An arrangement of the elements in a series such that each will, in general and under suitable conditions, replace from its compounds any element listed after it. See table below for the series of metals, from the most active to the least active. Also called displacement, activity, or electrochemical series.

ELECTROMOTIVE SERIES OF THE METALS

1. Potassium	10. Chromium	18. Copper
2. Sodium	11. Cadmium	19. Arsenic
3. Barium	12. Iron	20. Bismuth
4. Strontium	13. Cobalt	21. Antimony
5. Calcium	14. Nickel	22. Mercury
6. Magnesium	15. Tin	23. Silver
7. Aluminum	16. Lead	24. Platinum
8. Manganese	17. Hydrogen	25. Gold
9. Zinc

E LEC TRO MO′ TOR noun 1 An electric motor. 2 Any electric source, as a voltaic cell.

E·LEC TRON (-trŏn) noun 1 An electrically charged particle which is one of the basic components of the atom; it carries the unit charge of negative electricity, estimated at 4.8×10^{-10} cgs electrostatic units, and has a mass approximately one-eighteen hundredth (more exactly 1/1847) of that of the proton, or nucleus of the hydrogen atom. Electrons are emitted in the form of beta particles and cathode rays. 2 Same as ELECTRUM (amber). —FREE ELECTRON An electron not permanently bound to any atom and free to move within the limits of a given substance or material, as in a galvanic current. —E LEC·TRON IC adj.

E LEC TRO NEG′ A TIVE adj. 1 Appearing, as an element in electrolysis, at the positive electrode. 2 Having the property of becoming negatively electrified by contact with or the chemical action of another element. —noun An electronegative element.

ELECTRON GUN An apparatus for directing a steady stream of electrons in a given direction, usually in the form of a slender tube with thermionic filaments: used in television.

E LEC TRON ICS noun The study of the properties and behavior of electrons under all conditions, especially with reference to technical and industrial applications.

ELECTRON LENS A distribution of an electric field surrounding the path of an electron beam such that the beam may be concentrated in a focus similar to that of an optical lens.

ELECTRON MICROSCOPE A microscope which uses high-voltage streams of electrons in order to bring into visibility objects far beyond the range of the most powerful optical microscopes.

ELECTRON OPTICS A method for the control of electron beams or rays by properly adjusted magnetic or electric fields so that the flow of electrons will simulate the effect of light rays in an optical instrument.

ELECTRON TUBE A high vacuum tube in which a stream of electrons is emitted from a heated cathode and subjected to the controlling action of a grid which amplifies and directs the current.

ELECTRON VOLT A unit of energy equal to that acquired by an electron which passes through a potential difference of one volt: expressed as $1.592 \cdot 10^{-12}$ erg; also called equivalent volt.

E LEC TROP A·THY noun The treatment of disease by means of electricity. —E LEC·TRO PATH′ IC adj.

E·LEC TRO·PHOR·E′·SIS noun The slow movement of colloidal particles when under the influence of an electric field

E LEC TROPH O RUS noun [RI (ī) pl.] An instrument for generating static electricity by induction: commonly a flat disk of resin, to which may be applied another of wood coated with tin foil. Also E LEC TRO PHORE.

E LEC TRO PHYS I OL′·O·GY (-fiz-) noun The study of the electric phenomena of living organs. —E LEC TRO·PHYS I·O LOG′ I CAL adj.

E LEC′ TRO PLATE tr. verb [PLAT·ED, ·PLAT·ING] To coat with metal by electro-deposition. The object to be plated is placed in a solution of a salt of the metal in connection with the negative pole of a battery or dynamo. —noun An electroplated article. —E·LEC′ TRO·PLAT ER noun.

ELECTROSCOPE

Metallic pole, m, touched by electrically charged body, e, conducts impulse to metal foil strips, s, which acquire like charges and move apart, due to electrostatic repulsion.

E LEC′ TRO·PLAT ING (-plā·ting) noun 1 The act or process of depositing metal by electric means. 2 The coat of metal deposited by this process.

E·LEC·TRO POS′·I TIVE adj. 1 Appearing at the negative electrode: said of an element in electrolysis. 2 Having the property of becoming positively electrified by contact or chemical action. —noun An electropositive element.

E LEC·TRO·SCIS′·SION (-sizh′·un or -sish′·un) noun The cutting or division of tissues by an electrically operated knife.

E·LEC′ TRO·SCOPE noun An instrument for detecting the presence of electricity upon a conductor by the repulsion of pithballs or strips of goldleaf. See illustration. —E·LEC·TRO·SCOP′·IC adj.

E·LEC·TRO·STAT′·ICS noun That branch of electrical science which treats of the phenomena of electricity at rest or of frictional electricity: opposed to electrokinetics. —E·LEC·TRO·STAT′·IC or ·I·CAL adj. —E·LEC·TRO·STAT′·I·CAL·LY adv.

ELECTROSTATIC UNIT An electric charge which, concentrated at one point in a vacuum, would repel with a force of 1 dyne an equal and like charge placed 1 centimeter away.

E·LEC·TRO·STE·NOL′·Y·SIS noun The depositing of metallic particles in the pores of a membrane by electrolysis.

E·LEC·TRO·TAX′·IS noun That property of protoplasm which makes it susceptible to the influence of an electric stimulus, as shown by the direction of movement; also, any similar property in simple organisms. Also E·LEC·TROT′·RO·PISM. —E·LEC·TRO·TAC′·TIC adj.

E·LEC·TRO·TECH′·NICS (–tek′·nĭx) noun The science of the methods, processes, and operations by which electricity is applied in the industrial arts. —E·LEC·TRO·TECH′·NIC or ·NI·CAL adj.

E·LEC′·TRO·THER·A·PEU′·TICS (–pyōō′·tĭx) noun The treatment of disease by electricity, or the laws, etc., of such treatment. Also E·LEC·TRO·THER′·A·PY (–thĕr′·uh·pi). —E·LEC·TRO·THER′·A·PIST noun —E·LEC·TRO·THER·A·PEU′·TIC or ·TI·CAL adj. —E·LEC·TRO·THER·A·PEU′·TIST noun.

E·LEC·TROT·O·NUS noun The change in the activity of a nerve or muscle induced by a voltaic current. —E·LEC·TRO·TON′·IC adj.

E·LEC′·TRO·TYPE noun 1 A metallic copy of any surface, as a coin, made by electric deposition, especially one of a page of type for printing. 2 An impression from an electrotyped cut. 3 The process of electrotyping: electrotypy. —tr. verb [·TYPED, ·TYP·ING] To make an electrotype of.

E·LEC′·TRO·TYP ER (–tīp′·ur) noun One who electrotypes. Also E·LEC·TRO·TYP′·IST.

E·LEC·TRO·TYP′·IC (–tĭp′·ĭc) adj. Pertaining to or made by electrotyping.

E·LEC·TRO·TYP′·ING (–tĭp′·ing) noun The act or business of forming electrotypes. Also E·LEC·TRO·TYP′·Y.

E·LEC·TRO·VA′·LENCE noun A chemical bond formed by the complete transfer of electrons from the atoms of one element of a compound to the atoms of another element: distinguished from covalence.

E·LEC·TRO·VA′·LENT adj. Designating a compound formed by electrovalence.

E·LEC·TRUM noun 1 German silver or other like alloy. 2 Anciently, amber: also E·LEC·TRON. 3 Native gold containing a large percentage of silver. [<L. <Gr. ēlektron, amber]

E·LEC′·TU·A·RY (ĭ·lĕc′·chōō– or –tyōō–) noun [·RIES pl.] A confection made by incorporating a medicine with some sweet substance. [<L.L. electuarium <Gr. ekleikton <ek, out, + leichein, to lick]

EL EE·MOS′·Y·NAR (ĕl·ĭ·mŏs′– or ĕl·ĭ·uh·mŏs′·ĭ·nur) noun 1 One who gives charity; specifically, the supervisor of the distribution of papal charities. 2 [Obs.] Almoner.

EL EE MOS′ Y NA RY adj. 1 Of or pertaining to charity or alms; existing for the relief of the poor; charitable; gratuitous; as, eleemosynary institutions. 2 Aided by or dependent upon charity; as, the eleemosynary classes. —noun [·RIES pl.] A recipient of charity. [<Gr. eleēmosynē; see ALMS]

EL E GANCE noun 1 The state or quality of being elegant or refined. 2 Anything elegant. Also EL·E·GAN·CY. [·CIES pl.]

EL·E·GANT adj. 1 Marked by refinement, grace, or symmetry; as of action, form or structure; also, possessing or exhibiting refined taste. 2 Possessing a fine sense of beauty or fitness. 3 [Pop.] Excellent; capital; marked by completeness and simplicity; appropriate; as, an elegant argument. [<OF. <L. elegans <eligo; see ELECT] —EL·E·GANT·LY adv.

Synonyms: dainty, exquisite. Elegant (Latin elegans, select) refers to the lighter, finer elements of beauty in form or motion, but is often misused as a general term of approval. Exquisite denotes the utmost perfection of the elegant in minute details; we speak of an elegant garment, an exquisite lace. Exquisite is also applied to intense keenness of any feeling; as, exquisite delight; exquisite pain. Dainty, at its best, applies to what is at once slight, delicate, and pleasing; in its extreme use, it may apply to sensibilities or feelings too delicate for the demands of practical life, over-nice, squeamish. See BEAUTIFUL, CHOICE, FINE, POLITE. Antonyms: common, coarse, harsh, rude.

EL E·GI′·AC (ĕl·ĭ·jī′·ăc or ĭ·lee′·jī·ăc) adj. 1 Pertaining to elegies. 2 Of the nature of an elegy; sad; plaintive. 3 In ancient prosody, written in distichs consisting of hexameter and pentameter. Also EL·E·GI′·A·CAL. —noun 1 A poet who writes in the tone or in the meter of the elegy. 2 pl. Verse composed in the elegiac spirit or form.

EL·E·GIST (–jĭst) noun A writer of funeral songs; one who writes in elegiac verse. Also E·LE·GI·AST, EL·E·GI·OG′·RA·PHER.

E·LE·GIT (–jĭt) noun [Law] 1 A writ of execution, issued on the election of a judgment creditor, directing the sheriff to turn over to him the debtor's attachable goods, and, if these be insufficient, half the debtor's land, the latter to be held till the rents and profits shall extinguish the debt. 2 The right secured by this writ. [<L.]

EL′·E·GIZE (–jīze) verb [EL′·E·GIZED, EL′·E·GIZ·ING] To mourn or commemorate in elegiac form.

EL·E·GY (–jī) noun [·GIES pl.] 1 A funeral song; a meditative poem with sorrowful theme. 2 A classical poem written in elegiac verse. [<Gr. elegeia <elegos, mourning song]

E·LEK·TRA Same as ELECTRA.

EL·E·MENT noun 1 A component or essential part; especially, a simple part of anything complex; a constituent; ingredient. 2 pl. First principles or fundamental ideas; rudiments; also, the bread and wine of the Lord's Supper. 3 An ultimate and essential principle in the make-up of anything; essential constituent; anciently, one of the substances —earth, air, fire, and water—supposed to make up all things: still in popular use; as, the fury of the elements, the devouring element. 4 The natural sphere or environment; as, the element of fishes is water. 5 One of a limited number of substances which may not be decomposed without losing their specific physical, chemical, and electrical properties, as gold, carbon, hydrogen, etc. Each element possesses its own atomic structure and a set of characteristics which determines its place in the periodic table. See list below. 6 One of the primary parts of an organism: also, a cell or morphological unit. 7 One of a number of parts composing a symmetrical whole; one of the geometrical forms or data which together compose a figure, as a line, a point, a plane, a space; in calculus, an infinitely small portion of a magnitude; a generatrix. 8 A term in an algebraic expression. 9 One of the dissimilar substances in a voltaic cell or battery, etc. 10 A social group, political faction, or a group actuated by certain beliefs or traditions; as, the Prohibition element, the conservative element. See synonyms under PART, PARTICLE. —TO BE IN ONE'S ELEMENT To be in pleasing surroundings or be engaged in activities in which one excels. [<L. elementum, first principle]

EL·E·MEN′·TAL adj. 1 Of or pertaining to an element or elements; hence, pure; primary; pertaining to material elements; as, elemental action; pertaining to rudiments or first principles; rudimentary; as, elemental education. 2 In chemistry, uncombined; elementary; also, forming a necessary part or ingredient; as, an elemental salt. —·LY adv.

EL·E·MEN′·TA·RY adj. 1 Of, pertaining to, or being an element or elements, in any sense. 2 Treating of the first principles of anything; rudimental; as, an elementary analysis. 3 Having the nature of an infinitesimal part of a quantity or magnitude. —EL·E MEN′·TA·RI·LY adv. —EL·E MEN′·TA·RI·NESS noun.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION Public school and private education beyond kindergarten and preceding secondary school, from six to eight years in length, dealing with the fundamentals of education.

EL·E MI noun Any one of several gum resins obtained from tropical trees of various genera: used in drugs and varnishes. [<Sp. elemí, perhaps Ar. al-lumi]

E·LE NA (Sp., It. eh·leh′ nah) Same as HELEN.

E·LEN·CHUS (i·lĕng′·kus) noun [·CHI (ki) pl.] 1 The contradictory opposite of a proposition; that which must be proved in order to refute an opponent; hence, a refuting argument; a refutation. 2 A false refutation; sophism. Also E LENCH. [<L. elenchus <Gr. elenchos <elenchō, disgrace, confute] —E·LEN·CHIC (–lĕng′·kik) or ·CHI·CAL, E LENC·TIC or ·TI·CAL adj.

E·LE′ O LITE Same as ELAOLITE.

EL′ E O PLAST Same as ELAIOPLAST.

EL E PHANT noun 1 A massively built, almost hairless mammal of Asia and Africa (genera Elephas and Loxodonta), the largest of existing land animals, having a flexible proboscis or trunk, and the upper incisors developed as tusks. 2 Something unwieldy, burdensome, or hard to dispose of. See WHITE ELEPHANT. 3 A size of paper, 23 x 38 inches. [<Gr. elephas <Heb. eleph, ox]

ELEPHANT–EAR noun Any one of certain plants of the genus Begonia, with large, one-sided, heavy earlike leaves: also ELEPHANT'S–EAR.

ELEPHANT–FOOT noun A South African twining vine (Testudinaria elephantipes) of the yam family, having a conical, cormlike stem covered with a barky substance which, becoming deeply cracked, forms large angular protuberances like those on the shell of a tortoise: whence the name also of tortoise–plant; often cultivated in greenhouses. See HOTTENTOT–BREAD. Also ELEPHANT'S–FOOT.

EL·E PHAN TI′·A·SIS noun The final chronic stage of a disease caused by the presence in the blood and lymph of a parasitic nematode worm (Wuchereria bancrofti); it is characterized by a thickening and hardening of the skin, together with an enormous enlargement of the part affected, usually the lower extremities: also called Bancroft's filariasis.

EL·E·PHAN′·TINE (–tīn or –tīn) adj. Pertaining to an elephant; enormous; unwieldy.

EL·EU SIN′ I·A (ĕl·yōō–) noun pl. The Athenian festival and mysteries in honor of Demeter and Persephone, at Eleusis, near Athens. [<Gr.]

EL EU SIN′ I AN adj. Of or pertaining to Eleusis or the Eleusinia.

ELEUSINIAN MYSTERIES The secret religious rites, which were probably originated by the Thracians at Eleusis and later absorbed by the Athenian state religion.

ÐE·LEU SIS (ē·lyōō′–) An ancient town near Athens in Attica. See ELEUSINIA.

ÐE·LEU·SIS In Greek mythology, the son of Mercury.

EL·EU THE′ RI A (ĕl·yōō–) noun A festival kept by the Greeks after the battle of Platæa in honor of Zeus Eleutherios (the Deliverer). It was celebrated every fourth year.

EL′ E·VATE tr. verb [VAT ED, ·VAT ING] 1 To raise from a lower to a higher place, rank, or character; promote; exalt. 2 To raise the spirits of; cheer; inspire. 3 To raise the pitch or increase the loudness of. See synonyms under HEIGHTEN, PROMOTE, RAISE. [< L. e, out, + levo, lighten]

EL′ E·VAT ED (–vā·tĭd) adj. 1 Lofty in situation; high; as, an elevated plateau. 2 Lofty in character; sublime. See synonyms under GRAND, HIGH. —noun An overhead railroad.

EL·E VA′ TION noun 1 The act of elevating; exaltation. 2 An elevated place. 3 A geometrical drawing of the upright parts of a structure, as shown in blueprints and scale drawings. 4 The raising of the eucharistic elements: also ELEVATION OF THE HOST. 5 The music of voice or instrument that accompanies the elevation of the Host. 6 Height above the sea level. 7 The angular distance of a celestial body above the horizon. See synonyms under HEIGHT, RAMPART.

EL′·E VA·TOR noun 1 One who or that which elevates; a hoisting mechanism for grain, or a warehouse where grain is elevated and distributed; also, a movable platform or cage in a building, for carrying freight or passengers up or down. 2 In airplanes, an auxiliary airfoil, by the tilting or dipping of which the ascent or descent of the airplane is regulated: also called diving–rudder. See illustration under AIRPLANE.

É·LÈVE (eh·lĕv′) noun [F.] Pupil; scholar.

E·LEV EN adj. Consisting of one more than ten. —noun 1 The cardinal number preceding twelve and following ten. 2 Any of the symbols (11, xi, XI) representing this number. 3 A team or side of eleven players, as in cricket or football. [<OE. endleofan]

E·LEV ENTH adj. 1 Next in order after the tenth. 2 Being one of eleven equal parts. —noun 1 One of eleven equal parts. 2 The quotient of a unit divided by eleven; as, five is one eleventh of fifty–five. 3 In a series, the unit or thing after the tenth.

ELF noun [ELVES pl.] 1 In folklore, a dwarfish, mischievous sprite. 2 A dwarf or diminutive person: a pet name for a lively child. —tr. verb To twist or entangle, as the hair, a supposed practice of the elves. [<OE. ælf]

ELF·CHILD noun A child believed to have been left by elves in place of one that they have stolen; a changeling.

EL FER ROL Same as FERROL.

ELF IN adj. Relating or belonging to elves. —noun 1 An elf. 2 A sportive child.

ELF ISH adj. Relating to elves; mischievous. —·LY adv. —·NESS noun.

ELF–LAND noun The supposed home of the elves; fairyland.

ELF–LOCK noun A lock of hair tangled as if by elves; a straggling lock.

EL GAR, SIR EDWARD, 1857–1934, English composer.

EL GIN (–jin) 1 An ancient city, capital of Morayshire, Scotland; ruins of cathedral and castle. 2 A former name for Morayshire, Scotland: also EL′ GIN SHIRE. 3 A city in northern Illinois; watch–manufacturing

ELGIN MARBLES A collection of Greek sculpture in the British Museum, formerly on the Acropolis at Athens: so called from the Earl of Elgin, who had the sculptures brought to England, 1803–12.

EL GIZEH Same as GIZA.

EL GON A mountain in Uganda, NE. of Lake Victoria; 14,196 feet.

EL GRE·CO See under GRECO.

E LI (ee′·li) A Biblical high priest and judge. 1 Sam. iv, 13–18. [<Heb., the highest]

E LI·A Pen name of Charles Lamb.

E LI AS Same as ELIJAH

E LIC IT (–lĭs′·ĭt) tr. verb To draw out or forth, as by some attraction or inducement, bring to light; as, to elicit truth. [<L. elicitus <e, out, + lacio, allure] —E LIC I TA′ TION noun —E LIC I TOR noun.

E LIDE tr. verb [E LID ED, E LID ING] 1 To omit a vowel or syllable in writing or pronouncing a word. 2 To suppress; omit; ignore. 3 [Law] To annul. [< L. e, out, + lado, strike] —E LID I BLE adj.

EL I GI BLE (–jĭ·bl) adj. Capable of being chosen or elected; worthy of acceptance. —noun One who is eligible in any sense. [<OF. < L. eligo; see ELECT] —EL·I GI BIL′·I·TY, EL·I GI BLE NESS noun —EL I GI BLY adv.

E LI JAH A masculine personal name. Also E LI AS. [<Heb., God the Lord, or God is Jehovah]

—ELIJAH A prophet of Jehovah in the time of Ahab, 9th century B.C.

E LIM′ I NATE tr. verb [NAT ED, ·NAT·ING] 1 To remove, especially as injurious or superfluous; eject; separate and expel: applied to both mental and material things; as, to eliminate personal considerations, to eliminate waste from the system. 2 To remove (a quantity) from a system of algebraic equations. 3 To disregard as irrelevant; ignore. [<L. eliminatus <e, out, + limen, threshold]

E LIM I NA′ TION noun 1 The act of eliminating. 2 The state of being cast out or expelled. —E LIM I NA·TIVE adj. E LIM′·I·NA·TOR noun —E LIM′·I NA·TO RY adj.

E LIN GUID (ē·lĭng′·gwĭd) adj. Without power of speech; tongue–tied. [<L. e, out, + lingua, tongue]

EL·I NOR Same as ELEANOR.

EL I OT, CHARLES WILLIAM, 1834–1926, American educator; president of Harvard, 1869–1909. —GEORGE Pen name of Mary Ann Evans, 1819–80, English novelist. —JOHN, 1604–90, American clergyman; apostle to the Indians. —SIR JOHN, 1592–1632, English statesman and champion of liberty. —THOMAS STEARNS, born 1888, American poet and essayist; now a British subject.

E LIPH·A·LET A masculine personal name. Also E·LIPH A·LAT.

E LIS An ancient country of Peloponnesus, Greece; site of the ancient Olympic games.

E LIS·A·BETH Same as ELIZABETH.

E LI SHA A masculine personal name. [<Heb., God is salvation]

—ELISHA, ninth century B.C., a Jewish prophet of Jehovah; successor of Elijah.

E·LI·SION (e·lizh′·un) noun 1 The eliding or striking out of a part of a word; as in "o'er" for "over." 2 A suppression of a part. [< L. elisio <elisus; see ELIDE]

Synonyms (verb): engage, engross, hire, use. In general terms it may be said that to employ is to devote to one's purpose, to use is to render subservient to one's purpose; what is used is viewed as more absolutely an instrument than what is employed; a merchant employs a clerk; he uses pen and paper; hence, use, as applied to persons, inclines to the derogatory sense; as, the conspirators used him as a go-between. That which is used is often consumed in the using; as, we used twenty tons of coal last winter; in such cases we could not substitute employ. A person may be employed in his own work or in that of another; in the latter case the service is always understood to be for pay. In this connection employ is a word of more dignity than hire; a general is employed in his country's service; a mercenary adventurer is hired to fight; hire now implies that the one hired works directly and primarily for the pay, as expressed in the noun "hireling." See OCCUPY, RETAIN.

EM·PLOY·EE′ noun One who works for an employer in return for a salary, wages, or other consideration. Also EM·PLOY·É′.

END noun 1 The terminal point or part of any material object that has length 2 The part of an object that is near either extremity. 3 The point in time at which some process ceases, hence, the conclusion of any work or operation. 4 The farthest limit of the space occupied by any extended object. 5 The purpose in view. 6 An inevitable or natural consequence. 7 The close of life. 8 A fragment; remnant. 9 A player stationed at the end of a line, as in football. 10 In archery, a unit of shooting toward a butt, in England, three arrows; in the United States, six. — IN THE END At last. — TO THE END THAT In order that.
— verb 1 To put to, form, or come to a conclusion; come to the end of, finish. 2 To set on or be laid by the end 3 To kill or to die. [<OE. ende] Synonyms (noun): accomplishment, achievement, bound, boundary, cessation, close, completion, conclusion, consequence, consummation, design, effect, expiration, extent, extremity, finale, finis, finish, fulfilment, goal, intent, issue, limit, outcome, period, point, purpose, result, termination, terminus, tip, utmost, uttermost. The end is the terminal part of a material object that has length; the extremity is distinctively the terminal point, and may thus be but part of the end in the general sense of that word, the extremity is viewed as that which is most remote from some center, or some mean or standard position; the southern end of South America includes all Patagonia, the southern extremity or point is Cape Horn. Tip has nearly the same meaning as extremity, but is said of small or slight and tapering objects; as, the tip of the finger; point in such connections is said of that which is drawn out to exceeding fineness or sharpness, as the point of a needle, a fork, or a sword, extremity is said of something considerable; we do not speak of the extremity of a needle. A goal is an end sought or striven for, as in a race. For the figurative senses of end and its associated words, compare the synonyms for the verb END; also for AIM, CONSOLIDATE, DESIGN, EVENT, PURPOSE, REASON. Antonyms: see synonyms for BEGINNING.
Synonyms (verb): cease, close, complete, conclude, desist, expire, finish, quit, terminate, top. That ends, or is ended, of which there is no more, whether or not more was intended or needed, that is closed, completed, concluded, or finished which has come to an expected or appropriate end. A tumult in the audience may cause a speech to be ended when it is neither closed, completed, nor finished, not, in the strict sense, concluded. An argument may be closed with nothing proved; when an argument is concluded all that is deemed necessary to prove the point has been stated. To finish is to do the last thing there is to do. To terminate may be either to bring to an arbitrary or to an appropriate end; as, he terminated his remarks abruptly; the spire terminates in a cross. A thing stops that comes to rest from motion, or the motion stops or ceases when the object comes to rest, stop frequently signifies to bring or come to a sudden and decided cessation of motion, progress, or action of any kind. Compare ABOLISH, CEASE, EFFECT, FINISH, TRANSACT. Antonyms: commence, found, inaugurate, initiate, institute, open, originate, start, undertake. Compare INSTITUTE verb.

EN DEAV OR (–dĕv′·ur) noun An attempt or effort to do or attain something; earnest exertion for an end. — verb 1 To make an effort to do or accomplish an object; try. 2 [Obs.] To undertake. Also EN·DEAV OUR. [<EN– + F. devoir, duty]

Synonyms (noun): attempt, effort, essay, exertion, struggle, trial. Effort denotes the voluntary putting forth of power to attain or accomplish some specific thing; it reaches toward a definite end; exertion is a putting forth of power without special reference to an object. Every effort is an exertion, but not every exertion is an effort. Attempt is more experimental than effort, endeavor less strenuous but more continuous. An effort is a single act, an endeavor a continued series of acts. A struggle is a violent effort or strenuous exertion. An essay is an attempt, effort, or endeavor made as a test of the powers of the one who makes it. See AIM, ATTEMPT.

Synonyms (verb): attempt, essay, strive, try, undertake. To attempt is to take action somewhat experimentally with the hope and purpose of accomplishing a certain result; to endeavor is to attempt strenuously and with firm and enduring purpose. To attempt expresses a single act; to endeavor, a continuous exertion; we say I will endeavor (not I will attempt) while I live. To attempt is with the view of accomplishing, to essay with a view of testing our own powers. To undertake is to accept or take upon oneself as an obligation, as some business, labor, or trust; the word often implies complete assurance of success: as, I will undertake to produce the witness. To strive suggests little of the result, much of toil, strain, and contest, in seeking it; I will strive to fulfil your wishes, that is, I will spare no labor and exertion to do it. Try is the most comprehensive of these words. The original idea of testing or experimenting is not thought of when a man says "I will try." To attempt suggests giving up, if the thing is not accomplished at a stroke; to try implies using other means and studying out other ways if not at first successful. Try is more earnest; endeavor is more mild and formal. Antonyms: abandon, dismiss, drop, neglect, omit, overlook.

EN DEAV OR ER noun One who endeavors; specifically, a member of a Society of Christian Endeavor.

Also EN DO CRI′ NAL, EN DOC RI·NOUS, EN DO·CRIN′ IC. — noun The internal secretion of a gland.

ENDOCRINE GLANDS Any of several ductless glands found in most vertebrates, the internal secretions of which, released directly into the blood or lymph, have a powerful and specific influence upon some phase or phases of physiological activity. In the human body these glands compose a system of great complexity and significance in health and disease. See table below.

ENDOCRINE GLANDS

Name	Location	Type hormone
Adrenals (2)	Anterior to the kidneys	Adrenin, cortin
Gonads	Sex glands collectively
Ovaries (2)	Paired sex glands of the female	Estrone (theelin)
Pancreas	Upper abdominal cavity	Insulin
Parathyroids	In pairs, near the thyroid
Pineal	Attached to the brain, near pituitary
Pituitary	In the floor of the skull
Testes (2)	Paired sex glands of the male	Testosterone
Thymus	Above the heart
Thyroid	Paired lobes, one on each side of the trachea	Thyroxin

EN DO·CRI NOL′·O·GY noun That branch of medicine which treats of the anatomy, physiology, and pathology of the endocrine glands and of the properties and functions of the various internal secretions. — EN DO·CRI NOL′·O GIST noun.

EN·DUR·A·BLE (-dyōōr'-) adj. That may be endured; bearable.

EN·DUR·ANCE (-dyōōr'·uns) noun 1 The capacity or power to endure; ability to suffer pain, distress, hardship, or any very prolonged stress without succumbing; patient fortitude. 2 The act or experience of enduring or suffering. 3 [Obs.] Hardship. See synonyms under FORTITUDE.

EN·DURE (-dyōōr') verb [EN·DURED, EN·DUR·ING] 1 To have duration; continue; last. 2 To withstand or bear, as pain, sorrow, or destructive force, without yielding; suffer patiently. 3 To tolerate; permit. [<OF. endurer <L. in, in, + durus, hard]

Synonyms: abide, afford, allow, bear, brook, permit, suffer, support, sustain, tolerate, undergo. Bear is the most general of these words; it is metaphorically to hold up or keep up a burden of care, pain, grief, annoyance, or the like, without sinking, lamenting, or repining. Allow and permit involve large concession of the will; whispering is allowed by the school-teacher who does not forbid nor censure it; a state tolerates a religion which it would be glad to suppress. To endure is to bear with strain and resistance, but with conscious power; endure conveys a fuller suggestion of contest and conquest than bear. One may choose to endure the pain of a surgical operation rather than take anesthetics; he permits the thing to come which he must brace himself to endure when it comes. To afford is to be equal to a pecuniary demand, that is, to be able to bear it. Abide combines the senses of await and endure; as, I will abide the result. Compare ABIDE, LIVE, PERSEVERE, PERSIST, STAND, SUPPORT. Antonyms: break, despair, droop, fail, faint, fall, falter, sink, succumb, surrender, yield.

EN·DUR·ING (-dyōōr'-) adj. Having or showing endurance; lasting; long-suffering or long-continuing. See synonyms under PERMANENT, PERPETUAL. — ·LY adv. — ·NESS noun.

EN E MY noun [MIES pl.] 1 One who cherishes resentment or malicious purpose toward another, an adversary; foe. 2 One of a hostile army or nation; a hostile nation or military force collectively; also, a hostile ship. —adj. 1 Of or pertaining to a hostile army or power. 2 [Obs.] Unfriendly; hostile. [<OF. enemi <L. inimicus <in-, not, + amicus, friend]

Synonyms (noun): adversary, antagonist, competitor, foe, opponent, rival. An enemy in private life is one who is moved by hostile feeling with active disposition to injure; but in military language all who fight on the opposite side are called enemies or collectively "the enemy," where no personal animosity may be implied; foe, which is rather a poetical and literary word, implies intensely hostile spirit and purpose. An antagonist is one who opposes and is opposed actively and with intensity of effort; an opponent, one in whom the attitude of resistance is the more prominent, a competitor, one who seeks the same object for which another is striving; antagonists in wrestling, competitors in business, opponents in debate may contend with no personal ill-will; rivals in love, ambition, etc., rarely avoid inimical feeling. Adversary now commonly denotes one who not only opposes another in fact, but does so with hostile spirit or perhaps out of pure malignity. Compare synonyms for AMBITION. Antonyms: abettor, accessory, accomplice, ally, friend, helper, supporter.

EN ER GE' SIS (–jee'·sĭs) noun The chemical and physical changes which set free the energy produced by the respiratory processes in plant cells. [<NL. <Gr. energeō, be active]

Synonyms: amuse, beguile, cheer, delight, disport, divert, enliven, gratify, interest, occupy, please, recreate. To entertain, in the sense here considered, is to engage and pleasantly occupy the attention; to amuse is to occupy the attention in an especially bright and cheerful way, often with that which excites merriment or laughter; as, he entertained us with an amusing story. To divert is to turn from serious thoughts or laborious pursuits to something that lightly and agreeably occupies the mind; one may be entertained or amused who has nothing serious or laborious from which to be diverted. To recreate, literally to re-create, is to engage mind or body in some pleasing activity that restores strength and energy for serious work. To beguile is, as it were, to cheat into cheer and comfort by something that insensibly draws thought or feeling away from pain or disquiet. We beguile a weary hour, cheer the despondent, divert the preoccupied, enliven a dull evening or company, gratify our friends' wishes, entertain, interest, please a listening audience, occupy idle time, disport ourselves when merry, recreate when worn with toil; we amuse ourselves or others with whatever pleasantly passes the time without special exertion, each according to his taste. See ACCOMMODATE, CHERISH, INTFRESI. Antonyms: annoy, bore, busy, disquiet, distract, disturb, tire, weary.

EN·THU SI ASM (-thū′·zĭ·ăzm) noun 1 Earnest and fervent feeling; ardent zeal for a person or cause. 2 [Obs.] Exalted or ecstatic feeling; also, irrational religious ecstasy; divine fury or frenzy; possession. 3 An object of great interest to a person. [<Gr. enthousiasmos <en, in, + theos, god]

Synonyms: ardor, devotion, eagerness, earnestness, ecstasy, excitement, extravagance, fanaticism, fervency, fervor, frenzy, inspiration, intensity, passion, rapture, transport, vehemence, warmth, zeal. The old meaning of enthusiasm implies a pseudo-inspiration, an almost frantic extravagance in behalf of something supposed to be an expression of the divine will. This sense remains as the controlling one in the kindred noun enthusiast. Enthusiasm has now chiefly the meaning of an earnest and commendable devotion, an intense and eager interest. Zeal is burning earnestness, always tending to vigorous action with all the devotion of enthusiasm, but often without its hopefulness. Compare WARMTH. Antonyms: calculation, calmness, caution, coldness, deadness, dulness, indifference, lukewarmness, policy, prudence, timidity, wariness.

ES TEEM noun 1 Favorable opinion or estimation on the basis of worth, especially that based on moral characteristics; respect; regard. 2 Character that commands respect or consideration; estimableness; as, a person of esteem. 3 [Obs.] Estimation or judgment of merit or demerit; opinion; estimation.

— tr. verb 1 To regard as having worth or excellence; prize. 2 To hold in estimation (favorable or unfavorable); value; deem; estimate generally. [<F. estimer <L. æstimare, to value]

Synonyms (noun): estimate, estimation, favor, regard, respect. Esteem for a person is a favorable opinion on the basis of worth, especially of moral worth, joined with a feeling of interest in and attraction toward the person. Regard for a person is the mental view or feeling that springs from a sense of his excellence, with a cordial and hearty friendliness. Regard is more personal and less distant than esteem, and adds a special kindliness; respect is a more distant word than esteem. Respect may be wholly on one side, while regard is commonly mutual; respect in the fullest sense is given to what is lofty, worthy, and honorable, or to a person of such qualities; but we may pay respect to station or office, regardless of the person holding it. Estimate has more of calculation; as, my estimate of the man, or of his abilities, is very high. Estimation involves the idea of appraisal, and is especially used of the feeling entertained by numbers of people; as, he stood high in public estimation. Compare ESTEEM verb, ATTACHMENT, FRIENDSHIP, LOVE, REGARD. Antonyms: abhorrence, antipathy, aversion, contempt, dislike, hatred, loathing, repugnance.

Synonyms (verb): appreciate, calculate, consider, deem, estimate, hold, prize, regard, think, value. Esteem and estimate alike imply to set a certain mental value upon, but esteem is less precise, and mercantile than calculate or estimate. We esteem a jewel precious; we estimate it to be worth so much money. In popular usage esteem, as said of persons, denotes a union of respect and kindly feeling and, in the highest sense, of moral approbation; as, one whom I highly esteem. To appreciate anything is to be deeply or keenly sensible of or sensitive to its qualities or influence; as, to appreciate beauty or harmony; to appreciate one's services. To prize is to set a high value on for something more than merely commercial reasons. [<L. e, out, + venio, come] —·less adj.

Synonyms: case, chance, circumstance, consequence, contingency, end, episode, fact, fortune, incident, issue, occurrence, outcome, possibility, result, sequel. Etymologically, the incident is that which falls in, the event that which comes out; event is thus greater and more signal than incident; we speak of trifling incidents, great events; incidents of daily life, events of history. Circumstance agrees with incident in denoting a matter of relatively slight importance, but implies a more direct connection with the principal matter as indicated in the phrase "circumstantial evidence." An occurrence is, etymologically, that which we run against, without thought of its origin, connection, or tendency. An episode is connected with the main course of events, like an incident or circumstance, but is of more independent interest and importance. Outcome is the Saxon, and event the Latin for expressing the same original idea. Consequence and result express more of logical connection, and are more comprehensive. The end may be simple cessation; the event is what has been accomplished; the event of a war is victory or defeat; the end of the war is reached when a treaty of peace is signed. Since the future is contingent, event comes to have the meaning of a contingency; as, in the event of his death, the policy will at once fall due. Compare CIRCUMSTANCE, CONSEQUENCE, END.

e·vent·ful adj. Attended or characterized by important or noteworthy events; also, momentous. —·ly adv. —·ness noun.

EV·I·DENCE noun 1 That which makes evident or clear, whether taken singly or collectively; any ground or reason for knowledge or certitude in knowledge; proof, whether immediate or derived by inference; a fact or body of facts on which a proof, belief, or judgment is based. 2 [Law] That by means of which a fact is established: distinguished from proof, which is the result of evidence, and testimony, which is evidence given orally. 3 Evidentness; clearness. See synonyms under CERTAINTY, DEMONSTRATION, PROOF, TESTIMONY. — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE Evidence consisting of circumstances which furnish reasonable ground for believing or deciding as to the existence of fact, or the guilt or innocence of an accused person. — IN EVIDENCE Present; at hand; to be seen; conspicuous.

— tr. verb [·DENCED, ·DENC·ING] To make evident; show clearly; prove; evince; display; as, he evidenced strong interest. [<L. evidentia, clearness]

EV·I·DENT adj. Plain, manifest, or clear, as to the mind or the senses; obvious. — ·LY adv.

Synonyms: apparent, clear, conspicuous, discernible, distinct, glaring, indubitable, manifest, obvious, open, overt, palpable, patent, perceptible, plain, tangible, transparent, unmistakable, visible. That is apparent which clearly appears to the senses or to the mind as soon as the attention is directed toward it; that is evident of which the mind is made sure by some inference that supplements the facts of perception; the marks of a struggle were apparent in broken shrubbery and trampled ground, and the finding of a mutilated body and a rifled purse made it evident that robbery and murder had been committed. That is manifest which we can lay the hand upon; manifest is thus stronger than evident, as touch is more absolute than sight. That is obvious which is directly in the way so that it cannot be missed; as, the application of the remark was obvious. Visible applies to all that can be perceived by the sense of sight, whether the noonday sun, a ship on the horizon, or a microscopic object. Discernible applies to that which is dimly or faintly visible, requiring strain and effort in order to be seen; as, the ship was discernible through the mist. That is conspicuous which stands out and attracts the attention. Palpable and tangible express more emphatically the thought of manifest. See APPARENT, CLEAR, MANIFEST, NOTORIOUS. Antonyms: concealed, covert, dark, hidden, impalpable, impenetrable, imperceptible, invisible, latent, obscure, occult, secret, undiscovered, unimagined, unknown, unseen.

Synonyms: canvass, consider, criticize, discuss, explore, inspect, interrogate, investigate, observe, overhaul, ponder, question, ransack, scrutinize, search, study, test, try, view, weigh. See CONSIDER, INQUIRE, REVIEW. Compare synonyms for DELIBERATE (weigh).

EX AM PLE (ĕgz–) noun 1 A thing or person suitable to be used as a copy. 2 An instance of something to be avoided; an act, especially a punishment, serving or designed to serve as a warning. 3 A sample; specimen. 4 An instance serving to illustrate a rule. 5 A problem to be solved. 6 That with which something may be compared; precedent; parallel.

— tr. verb [Obs.] To illustrate by example; justify by an example; also teach or instruct by means of example. [<L. exemplum <ex, out, + emptus, pp. of emo, buy]

Synonyms (noun): archetype, exemplar, exemplification, ideal, model, pattern, precedent, prototype, sample, specimen, standard, type, warning. From its original sense of sample or specimen (L. exemplum) example derives the seemingly contradictory meanings, on the one hand of a pattern or model, and on the other hand of a warning—a sample or specimen of what is to be followed, or of what is to be shunned. An example, however, may be more than a sample or specimen of any class; it may be the very archetype or prototype to which the whole class must conform. Example comes nearer to model than to the necessary exactness of the pattern. In its application to a person or thing, exemplar can scarcely be distinguished from example; but example is most frequently used for an act, or course of action, for which exemplar is not used; as, one sets a good (or a bad) example. An exemplification is an illustrative working out in action of a principle or law, without any reference to its being copied or repeated; an example guides, an exemplification illustrates or explains. Compare ARCHETYPE, MODEL, PRECEDENT, SAMPLE.

FE·BOLD FE·BOLD·SON In American folklore, Swedish pioneer plainsman, defier of tornadoes, Indians, politicians, and extreme heat or cold. He unwittingly caused the prairies to be so infernally hot in the summer. In 1848 the Petrified Snow covered the plains and delayed the 49ers in their gold rush to California until 1849. Febold brought sand from Death Valley, because "the sands of the desert never grow cold" and sold it to the gold rushers, who were thus enabled to continue their rush. The sand sifted out of the wagons, buried the Petrified Snow, and Febold spent the next 20 years trying to think up some way to control the heat. Finally he gave up and went to California to study irrigation and forestry. When he comes back he is going to put trees and water on the prairies.

FERRET
(Mustela furo)

²FER·RET noun Narrow ribbon or tape. Also FER·RET·ING. [<It. fioretto <L.L. floricttus <L. flos, a flower]

³FER·RET noun A glassmaker's iron rod for trying the melted material. [<L. ferrum, iron]

FERRI A combining form from Latin ferrum, iron, denoting the presence of iron.

FER·RI·AGE (fer′·ī·ij) noun 1 The act of ferrying; conveyance by ferry. 2 The toll charged for ferrying.

FER·RIC (fer′–) adj. 1 Pertaining to iron. 2 Pertaining to or designating compounds of iron in its higher chemical valence. [<L. ferrum, iron]

FERRIC ACETATE A reddish-brown powder, $Fe_2(C_2H_3O_2)_6$, widely used as an ingredient in many chemicals as a mordant, and in certain drug preparations.

FERRIC OXIDE Iron sesquioxide, Fe_2O_3; hematite: one of the most important ores of iron.

FERRIC SULFATE A compound of iron, $Fe_2(SO_4)_3$, uniting with nine molecules of water in the form of colorless crystals: used alone or as iron alum in tanning and dyeing.

FER·RI·CY·AN′·IC (fer–) adj. Of or pertaining to a compound of iron in its higher valence and cyanogen; as, ferricyanic acid, $H_3Fe(CN)_6$. [<L. ferrum, iron, + CYANIC]

FER·RI·CY′·A·NIDE (–nīde or –nĭd) noun A salt of ferricyanic acid. Also FER·RI·CY′·A·NID.

FER·RIF·ER·OUS (–us) adj. Yielding iron, as rocks.

FER·RIS WHEEL (fer′–) A giant vertical power-driven wheel that revolves on a stationary axle and bears swinging observation cars for passengers. [<G. W. G. Ferris, 1859–96, American engineer]

FER·RITE (fer′–) noun 1 Indeterminable reddish decomposition products in altered igneous rocks, presumably containing iron. 2 Any compound, such as franklinite (zinc ferrite), considered as a derivative of the ferric hydroxide, $Fe(OH)_3$. 3 The pure metallic-form constituent in iron and steel. [<L. ferrum, iron]

FERRO A combining form from Latin ferrum, iron, denoting derivation from or composition with iron; specifically, the presence of iron in the ferrous condition.

FERRO-ALLOY (–a·loy′ or –al′·oy) noun An alloy of iron with certain other metals used in the making of special steels, as nickel, manganese, chromium, etc.

FER·RO·CAL′·CITE (fer–) noun A variety of calcite containing ferrous carbonate.

FER′·RO·CHROME noun An alloy of iron and chromium: used in the production of especially hard steel. Also FER·RO·CHRO′·MI·UM.

FERRO-CONCRETE noun Concrete containing metal bars or rods disposed through the mass in such a way as to increase its tensile strength and durability: also called reinforced concrete.

FER·RO·CY·AN′·IC adj. Designating a compound obtained by the treatment of ferrocyanide with acid; as, ferrocyanic acid, $H_4Fe(CN)_6$.

FER·RO·CY′·A·NIDE (–nīde or –nĭd) noun A compound containing the tetravalent radical $Fe(CN)_6$; as, potassium ferrocyanide, $K_4Fe(CN)_6$.

FER·ROL (fĕ·rōle′) A fortified seaport city in NW. Spain. Also EL FER·ROL.

FER·RO·MAG·NE′·SIAN (–zhun) adj. Relating to rocks rich in iron and magnesium, as pyroxene.

FER·RO·MAG·NET′·IC adj. 1 Acting in a magnetic field as or like iron; also, extremely magnetic. 2 Formerly, paramagnetic. — FER·RO·MAG′·NE·TISM noun.

FER·RO·MAN′·GA·NESE (–măng′·guh·neez or –neez) noun An alloy of iron, containing 50 percent or more of manganese and being rich in carbon: used in making tough steel.

FER·RO·MO·LYB′·DE·NUM noun An alloy of iron and molybdenum used in the manufacture of a special steel.

FER·RO·NICK′·EL noun An alloy of iron containing at least 25 percent of nickel and practically free from carbon.

FER·RO·SIL′·I·CON noun A compound of silicon and iron added to iron when molten, to increase the proportion of silicon.

FER·RO·TUNG′·STEN noun An alloy of iron and tungsten: used in the manufacture of high-speed tool steel.

FER′·RO·TYPE noun A tintype. [<L. ferrum, iron, + TYPE]

FER·ROUS (fĕr′·us) adj. In chemistry, of or pertaining to bivalent iron, where its combining value is lowest; as, ferrous chloride, $FeCl_2$: also spelled ferreous. [<L. ferrum, iron]

FERROUS CARBONATE A compound, $FeCO_3$, precipitated as a white solid, uniting readily with the free oxygen of the air; also found as a mineral, which is an important iron ore.

FERROUS SULFATE A compound, $FeSO_4·H_2O$, or, in its crystallized form, $FeSO_4·7H_2O$, which unites with free oxygen to form ferric sulfate. See COPPERAS.

FERROUS SULFIDE A compound, FeS, formed either as a black solid precipitated by the action of an iron salt solution with an alkaline sulfide, or as a brittle solid from the union of sulfur and iron under heat; a source of hydrogen sulfide.

FER·RO·VA·NA′·DI·UM noun An alloy of iron and vanadium: used in the manufacture of a special steel.

FER·RU·GI·NOUS (–roō′·jī·nus) adj. 1 Of or like iron. 2 Rust-colored. [<L. ferruginus <ferrugo, iron rust, <ferrum, iron]

FERRUGINOUS THRUSH The brown thrasher.

FER·RULE (fĕr′·ul) noun 1 A metal ring or cap, as on the end of a cane or around the handle of a tool. 2 A bushing or thimble. 3 The frame of a slate. 4 A ferule. — tr. verb [·RULED, ·RUL·ING] To furnish with a ferrule. [<OF. virelle <L. viriola <viriæ, bracelets]

— adv. 1 [Pop.] Very much; finely; well; excellently. 2 In billiards, in a manner producing a fine carom, etc.

— verb [FINED, FIN·ING] 1 To refine; make or become purified, thin, or slender: with down. 2 To melt or fade gradually. [<F. fin <L. finis, end] — FINE·LY adv.

Synonyms (adj.): beautiful, clarified, clear, comminuted, dainty, delicate, elegant, excellent, exquisite, gauzy, handsome, keen, minute, nice, polished, pure, refined, sensitive, sharp, slender, slight, small, smooth, splendid, subtile, subtle, tenuous, thin. Fine denotes that which has been brought to a full end, finished, consummated. From this root-sense many derived meanings branch out, causing words quite remote from each other to be synonyms of fine. That which is truly finished is excellent of its kind, and beautiful, if a thing that admits of beauty; as, a fine house, fine trees, a fine woman, a fine morning. If it is a thing that admits of the removal of impurities, it is not finished till these are removed, and hence fine signifies clarified, clear, pure, refined; as, fine gold. That which is finished is apt to be polished, smooth to the touch, minutely exact in outline; hence fine comes to be a synonym for all words like dainty, delicate, exquisite; as, fine manners, a fine touch, fine perceptions. As that which is delicate is apt to be small, by an easy extension of meaning fine becomes a synonym for slender, slight, minute, comminuted; as, a fine thread, fine sand; or for filmy, tenuous, thin; as, a fine lace, fine wire; and as a thin edge is keen and sharp, fine becomes also a synonym for these words; as, a fine point, a fine edge. Compare BEAUTIFUL, EXCELLENT, MINUTE, TASTEFUL. Antonyms: big, blunt, clumsy, coarse, great, heavy, huge, immense, large, rude, stout, thick.

2FINE noun 1 A pecuniary penalty; the money so required, or anything forfeited as a penalty. 2 In English law, an amicable adjustment of a suit either actual or fictitious; a final agreement as for the possession of lands. 3 [Obs.] End; conclusion; death. — IN FINE Finally.

Synonyms: accessible, affable, affectionate, amicable, brotherly, companionable, complaisant, cordial, favorable, fond, genial, hearty, kind, kindly, loving, neighborly, sociable, social, tender, well-disposed. Friendly, as said of persons signifies having the disposition of a friend; as said of acts, it signifies befitting or worthy of a friend. The adjective friendly does not reach the full significance of the nouns "friend" and "friendship"; one may be friendly to those who are not his friends, and to be in friendly relations often signifies little more than not to be hostile. Affable and accessible are distinctively used of public and eminent persons, who might, if disposed, hold themselves at a distance from others. Companionable and sociable refer to manner and behavior, cordial and genial express genuine [illegible] stronger than the Latin amicable. Fond is commonly applied to an affection that becomes, or at least appears, excessive. Affectionate, devoted, and tender are almost always used in a high and good sense; as, an affectionate son; a devoted friend; "the tender mercy of our God," Luke i, 78. See AMICABLE, GOOD, PROPITIOUS. Compare FRIENDSHIP. Antonyms: adverse, alienated, antagonistic, bellicose, belligerent, cold, contentious, disaffected, distant, estranged, frigid, hostile, ill-disposed, indifferent, inimical, unfriendly, unkind, warlike.

—verb To produce as fruit; produce fruit from; bear fruits. [<F. <L. fructus <fruor, enjoy]

Synonym (noun): vegetable. In the botanical sense not only apples, pears, peaches, tomatoes, figs, etc., but all berries, nuts, grains, beans, peas, pumpkins, squashes, cucumbers, and melons, as well as pine cones, the samaras or winged seeds of the maple, ash, or elm, and many other products, are fruits. Popular usage, however, is narrower. The grains have been dropped, and the tendency is to drop nuts also, so that a fruit is now generally understood to be the fleshy and juicy product of some plant, usually tree or shrub (and nearly always containing the seed), which, when ripe, is edible without cooking, and adapted for use as a dessert as well as a salad. The quince, however, while usually cooked before eating, is classed among fruits, and we sometimes speak of poisonous fruits, as the berries of the nightshade. A vegetable, in the popular sense, is any part of a herbaceous plant commonly used for culinary purposes, and may consist of the root, as in the beet and turnip; the stem, as in the asparagus, celery, and rhubarb; a tuber, or underground stem, as in the potato, the foliage, as in cabbage and spinach, or of that which is botanically the fruit, as in the tomato, bean, pea, and eggplant. See synonyms under HARVEST, PRODUCT.

GEN·DER (jĕn′–) noun 1 A distinction of words into masculine, feminine, and neuter classes, as they agree in forms and syntax; a form of inflection of certain words, especially nouns and pronouns, by which the sex or lack of sex (he, she, it), of that which they represent, is indicated. Words having the same form for the masculine and feminine have COMMON GENDER, as worker can be either masculine or feminine. The NATURAL GENDER of a word is that which corresponds to its sex or lack of sex, as maid is feminine gender, box is neuter, boy is masculine. GRAMMATICAL GENDER is that assigned to a word by grammatical usage regardless of natural classification, as Mädchen (G., maiden) is neuter gender. 2 [Pop.] Sex. 3 [Obs.] A kind, genus. — tr. verb [Obs.] To beget; engender; give rise to. [<L. genus; see GENUS]

Synonym (noun): sex. Sex is a distinction among living beings; gender is a distinction in language partially corresponding to this distinction in nature; while there are but two sexes, there are in some languages, as in Latin and German, three genders. We speak of the masculine or feminine gender, the male or female sex. The French language has but two genders and makes the names of all inanimate objects either masculine or feminine. Modern English retains little grammatical gender except in the pronouns (he, she, it, etc.) and in suffixes and prefixes, as aviat*or*, aviatr*ix*, emper*or*, empr*ess*, lion, lion*ess*, wait*er*, wait*ress*, he-bear, she-bear, etc.

Synonyms (verb): bestow, cede, communicate, confer, deliver, furnish, grant, impart, supply. To give is primarily to transfer to another's possession or ownership without compensation; in its secondary sense in popular use, it is to put into another's possession by any means and on any terms whatever, a buyer may say "Give me the goods, and I will give you the money"; we speak of giving answers, information, etc., and often of giving what is not agreeable to the recipient, as blows, medicine, reproof; but when there is nothing in the context to indicate the contrary, give is always understood in its primary sense; as, this book was given me. Give thus becomes, like get, a term of such general import as to be a synonym for a wide variety of words. To grant is to put into one's possession in some formal way, or by authoritative act; as, Congress grants lands to a railroad corporation. Confer has a similar sense, as, to confer a degree or an honor, we grant a request or petition, but do not confer it. To impart is to give of that which one still, to a greater or less degree, retains; the teacher imparts instruction. HAVE (hăv) verb [HAD, HAV·ING. Present indicative singular, I HAVE, thou HAST, he HAS] 1 To be in possession or control of; own; possess; as, he has a fine house. 2 To hold as content; bear as an accompaniment; contain; comprise; as, the well has little water; the book has a significant title. 3 To possess by receiving, gaining, or getting in any way; as, I had a letter this morning. 4 To experience, or be affected with; feel or realize; suffer from or enjoy. 5 To entertain; exercise; cherish; as, to have patience. 6 To carry on; engage in; as, to have a conference or a discussion; to have a talk. 7 To cause to be; procure; as, to have a house built. 8 To bear or endure; allow; permit; as, I will have no interference. 9 To be obliged or compelled to; as, I have to go. 10 To receive or enjoy as fulfilled or accomplished; realize; as, to have one's wish. 11 To hold, as in opinion; esteem or regard. 12 To hold as an opinion, or to affirm as something undeniable; as, they had it that the fire was incendiary; the newspaper has it that it will snow. 13 To occupy a certain position in relation to; as, he had the wind at his back. 14 To manifest, exercise, exemplify, use (a sentiment, feeling, quality, etc.), as, have the courtesy to hear me. 15 To possess an advantage over; hold embarrassed, nonplussed, or vanquished; as, I had him in that argument; he had me there; also, to trick; cheat. 16 To know; understand; as, my cook has no English. 17 To cause to be, come, or go; bring; get; as, have him away, have him shot. —TO HAVE AT To attack. —TO HAVE DONE To stop; desist. —TO HAVE IT IN FOR To have a grudge against; to be waiting for a chance for revenge or retaliation. —TO HAVE ON To be wearing. —TO HAVE IT OUT To continue a fight or an argument to the end. [<OE. habban]

Synonyms: hold, occupy, own, possess. Have is applied to whatever belongs to or is connected with one; a man may be said to have what is his own, what he has borrowed, what has been entrusted to him, or what he has stolen. To possess a thing is to have the ownership with control and enjoyment of it. To hold is to have in one's hand, or securely in one's control; a man holds his friend's coat for a moment, or he holds a struggling horse; he holds a promissory note, or holds an office. To own is to have the right of property in; to possess is to have that right in actual exercise; to occupy is to have possession and use with or without ownership. A man occupies his own house or a room in a hotel; he may own a farm of which he is not in possession because a tenant occupies it and is determined to hold it. To be in possession differs from possess in that to possess denotes both right and fact, while to be in possession denotes simply the fact with no affirmation as to the right. To have reason is to be endowed with the faculty; to be in possession of one's reason denotes that the faculty is in actual present exercise.

Have is used as an auxiliary verb with a past participle, sometimes with another auxiliary, to denote completed action in a verb form; as, I have given, I have been given.

In certain phrases of preference, as had as lief, had better, had liefer, had rather, etc., the had, early hadde, subjunctive preterite, is equivalent to the modern would have. You had better hurry = you would be wiser to hurry; I had rather die = I would have death rather; I had liefer die = I would have (hold) it, i.e., to die, liefer, dearer. From Anglo-Saxon to Chaucer, me were liefer die, to me it would be dearer to die, was the more common idiom; from 1450 to 1550, had liefer; from 1550 onward, had rather.

— noun 1 Assistance afforded toward the promotion of an object or the attainment of an end. 2 Remedy or relief; rescue or succor. 3 One who or that which aids; a helper. 4 [Pop.] A hired servant; domestic: often used collectively; as, the help are on strike. 5 A portion of food. [<OE. helpan] — HELP·ER noun — HELP ING adj. & noun.

Synonyms (verb): abet, aid, assist, befriend, cooperate, encourage, foster, relieve, second, succor, support, sustain, uphold. Help expresses greater dependence and deeper need than aid. In extremity we say "God help me" rather than "God aid me." In time of danger we cry "help! help!" rather than "aid! aid!" To aid is to second another's own exertions. We speak of helping the helpless, rather than of aiding them. Help includes aid, but aid may fall short of the meaning of help. In law to aid or abet makes one a principal. (Compare synonyms for ACCESSORY.) To cooperate is to aid as an equal, to assist implies a subordinate and secondary relation. One assists a fallen friend to rise; he cooperates with him in helping others. Encourage, and usually uphold, refer to mental aid; succor and support, oftenest to material assistance. We encourage the timid or despondent, succor the endangered, support the weak, uphold those who else might be shaken or cast down. Compare ABET, AID, PROMOTE, SERVE. Antonyms: see synonyms for HINDER.
